When chiropractors talk, Midwest Software listens!

Thomas Edison said that “The doctor of the future will give no medicine, but will interest his patients in the care of the human frame, in diet, and in the cause and prevention of disease.” With natural healing becoming more and more popular, chiropractors need more attention than ever when it comes to technology.

After years of the chiropractic industry having to settle for electronic medical records (EMR) software that wasn't made to suit the needs of their specific specialty, Midwest Software releases Chiro QuickCharts, the EMR/Notes program built specifically for a chiropractic clinic.

With years of experience in the EMR industry, Midwest Software took all they've learned from chiropractors and office staff and developed a program that allows patients to enter a full medical history in just a few minutes. For follow up office visits, patients check themselves in and answer a few questions about how they are doing that day. The list of patients waiting is displayed on all of the office computers so doctors can track patients as they move throughout the office.

Other systems were developed for a traditional medical practice, where patients return occasionally and a large amount of time sometimes passes between each visit. In chiropractic clinics, patients seek a drug-free recovery from an injury, or chronic condition, which means they visit more frequently to reduce pain and recovery time. Because of this most of the systems on the market are not usable in this environment.

Midwest Software took the initiative to develop a system that was practical in a chiropractic setting, but also involves patients in the entry and updating of their progress.

“Of course we wanted to make all the basic aspects of our system very easy to use, but we also wanted a big competitive edge,” says owner Alex Niswander. “We did this by including many bonus features, such as patient check-in, patient tracking and in-office chat. We also have compatibility with Medisoft and Eclipse, which are the two largest billing software systems in the industry.”

Chiro Quick-Charts offers a free trial version so that doctors may try it free for 30 days before buying, something few software packages offer. This allows an office to test-drive the system before buying to ensure it is a good fit. “We stand behind our system 100% and that is why I insisted that we have a free trial version,” remarks Niswander.
